Infants' Silk Headdresses, Patented in the United States, Great Britain

A want never before supplied, and which will be appreciated thy all when seen, especially by mothers, who know how to prize, as note others, what adds to the comfort of their infants, especially when combined with heauty.

In making lofants' Caps or Headdresses the first requisite is that they should be delicate and soft, so as not to chafe the teneer skin of the wearer, and at the same time light, so as not to true the weak muscles of the neck.

Infants' Caps

ro as not to tire the weak muscles of the neck.

Infants' Caps
have been made of lace, but this material (when real) is expensive, and at the same time harsh, so as to be liable to chair the skin, especially in the neck, where it must necessarily be gathered.

Infants' Caps
have also been made of worsted, but Caps thus made are too warm, especially for summer wear.

My New Cap is made of the best embroidering Sitk, wrought in the most elegant manuer by hand, and is delicate, soft, light, and not too warm, and at the same time neat and beautiful, and recommended by all physicans—silk being a nonconductor of heat.

Another advantage to purchasers is that at a glance they know they are not buying the initiation for the real, which takes experts to decide between the real and imitation laces in use.
